People Get a 'Buzz' Out of Funny Gem Show Machine

By ROGER HIRSCH

What else would you expect to find at a gem and rock show than an . . . Astro-Electron Jewel and Cabochon Maker.

"It's 50 to 100 years ahead of its time," says John A. Lewis, 6225 Judson, who constructed the eight-foot-high monster.

Lewis, a science teacher at Robin Mickle Junior High, puts on a floppy black wig and pushes and pulls ubiquitous switches and buttons which run the "comic relief" machine. Buzzers lights and flying rolls of toilet paper mystify the crowds of children.

When the machine is done, it has produced either a cabochon, a gem cut in convex form and used in jewelry, or a note giving an excuse why it has not.

"It's my hope to get people to believe in such a machine purely for fun," says Lewis, whose brainchild first appeared some eight years ago in smaller form.

Constructed of wood, Christmas tree lights telephones and washing machine parts, the cabochon maker concludes its activities by tossing paper into the crowd.

Elsewhere in the show at Pershing Auditorium, children and parents crowded around various displays. One popular item is the Masque of the Ancients, a copper mask one and a half by two feet which is adorned with various stones for feathers, eyes and other facial features.

Also among the more prominent items is an 84-pound reproduction of the Great Seal of the U.S. done in stone. There are 15 giant pieces of "Jupiter's Jewelry" weighing 122 pounds.

Besides a display of large pieces of petrified wood, there is an extensive shell collection shown by Leonard Hill III, whose exhibit won an international trophy.

Besides the over 200 displays, many dealers are at the show, displaying and selling various gems and stones to be used in jewelry fish tanks or rock collections.

The 11th Annual Gem and Mineral Show will end at 8 p.m. Sunday. Those who do not go home with some gem or rock will at least have been exposed to the fascinating world of rockhounds.
